TO THE PUBLIC

We begin the new year with a renewed determination to still better serve the interests of our patrons and the public in general. That our efforts in this direction are appreciated we have no room to doubt. We are grateful for the liberal support which the public have accorded us during the past year and which has rendered it one of success to us. Our Stock will always be found to be well assorted as it is ordered with great care and with a view of supplying you with just such Goods as you require. In this way our shelves are never loaded with unsalable goods; on the contrary everything is fresh and in season. Our large and commodious store house in rear of store is now completed and we are prepared to receive all kinds of grain, also Pork, Hides, Sheepskins, Tallow, Wool, &c., &c. For these we offer the highest cash price. When disposing of your oats be sure and get our bid before selling. It will always be worth your trouble. Our object is to keep the price of produce as high as possible.

Grain can be driven right to storehouse door and there weighed without further trouble.

Another consignment of Crockery and Glassware to hand. Cups and Saucers (Willow Pattern) by the dozen or half dozen, also plates to match. See them.

We trust to merit a continuance of your patronage.

ASTRACHAN MANTLES

In Sacques and Newmarkets

Are the best, most durable and comfortable garment a lady can provide herself with. They are appropriate for any and all occasions besides being the most economical and the only fur coat that rain will not seriously injure, and is entirely free from the attacks of moths. Notwithstanding the great number already sold in this locality the present indications are that the demand will be larger than ever this season and as a moderately good Astrachan Mantle will last a lady from 8 to 12 years ordinary wear, every intending purchaser should make it a point to buy early as it is then and only then you can get first choice and first choice means the best and handsomest goods.

The City Store in view of this large demand for first class reliable goods has taken great promotion to provide only the best all hand-made, every seam well taped and interlined with strong linen throughout, and none but the best blue backed skeins of genuine London dye used in the manufacture of these garments.

By constant care and a thorough knowledge we have gained a reputation for Astrachan Mantles that we cannot afford to jeopardize, and those who want a good reliable fur garment and the largest stock in the Midland district to choose from without the possibility of purchasing a bad one should come to the City Store without any more ado.

We have a most complete range of prices.

LOCAL ECHOES.

Many Minor Matters Muchly Mixed.

The next township councils meet on Monday next, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon.

Mr. C. F. Tinson took away a large drove of sheep and cattle on Tuesday, nearly all of which he purchased from Mr. Wm. Gainor.

A new farmers' store is being started in this village by Mr. Rolfe, formerly of the township of Snowdon. We wish him ample success in his undertaking.

Agricultural.—The annual meeting of the Agricultural Society for electing officers and auditing the accounts took place yesterday in the Secretary's office, Minden village.

We understand that Miss Carrie Hartle has been engaged as teacher of school house No.—, Lutterworth. Miss Hartle is a faithful and efficient teacher, and we congratulate the people of this section who have secured her valuable services.

A Gardner's Gift.—Judge Dean, who acted as referee in the arbitration case here with Messrs. Fielding and Delamere, instructed the latter gentleman to collect his fee for his services and use it as he, Mr. Delamere thought best as chairman of the school board for the benefit of the village school.

Lake Route.—Mr. T. Leary, Government contractor for surveying the dalle between Minden and Cobconnk, has establish ed a track on the ice the whole length of Gull lake, this shortens the distance and enables Mr. Leary to make better time. Mr. Leary is usually the first man to establish a track on any of Gull lake.

Another Team Drowned.—It is reported that a valuable team belonging to Mr. Lane, of Haliburton, was lost in the ice on Head Stone Lake, last week, together with a load of supplies they were hauling to the lumber shanties. The driver and another person with him had a narrow escape themselves.

Fire.—Mr. John Francis, an Englishman, lately arrived in this country, who bought Mr. D. Talley's farm, Lot 27, Con. 4, Lutterworth, had the misfortune to have his house and nearly all its contents destroyed by fire on Thursday night last. The fire originated in a defective chimney.

Ice.—We notice Mr. Morrow, of the Dominion Hotel, is cutting splendid ice on Gull river at the village bridge. It is clear and solid, and about a foot thick, altho' it has only been a few days freezing. However, such cold weather as we have had now steadily for about a week, will make not only ice but also blue noses and aching fingers and toes.

Personal.—Mrs. James Bell and Miss Curtlay, of Dunsford, have been visiting for the past week at Mr. F. Shoman's. Mr. E. Williams, the watchmaker, will return to Minden this week. He will be found at Mr. H. Eastman's store. Miss Eastman is visiting friends in Lindsay.—Mrs. John Gittens left town for Toronto on Monday last.

Dissolution.—Mr. William Sowyers, Anson, lost another of his children from this dread disease on Wednesday of last week. This is the fifth child he has lost by death. Another of his children has fallen ill, and is thought to be progressing favorably towards convalescence. Mr. Sowyers and his wife have the sincere sympathy of a large number of friends in their severe affliction.

Tea Concerts.—Owing to Mr. Dean's absence, there was no tea held in Mr. Paul's church, Minden, on Sunday last. Mr. Kelly, Baptist minister, preached in the Presbyterian church in the afternoon and to the Methodist church in the evening, when he had crowded houses. We understand, Mr. Kelly is to preach in future in the Presbyterian church every second Sunday afternoon.

Arbitration.—The matters in dispute between Mr. F. Wilson and W. Archer, both of Minden township, were referred to Messrs. W. J. Fielding and J. H. Delamere for settlement, and they selected His Honor Judge Dean for referee, and we understand the differences of these gentlemen have been amicably and satisfactorily arranged between them thus saving expensive litigation.

Mr. Stephen Dawson lost a very valuable team of horses in the ice on Basking Lake last week. He was on his way to see a neighbor to thresh at the time and at the place he was going, he happened to get on a spot where there were two creeks running to make a point, which broke off with the weight of the team. Mr. Dawson has the sympathy of all who know him in his loss. The team was said to be worth $300.

Social Gathering.—A large and successful party was held at the residence of W. Martin, Esq., on the newly elected reeve of Lutterworth on Friday evening last. About fifty guests were present and all seemed to enjoy themselves splendidly, to the music of dance, tripping the light fantastic toe away past the wee sma' hours. The music was excellent and the refreshments copious and varied as supper for the guests, was characterized by Mrs. Hartle's hospitality. It takes the ladies of Lutterworth to get up and give a good repast, and Mrs. Hartle on this occasion sustained her reputation as an adept in the art of "setting a table."

Lady Visitor.—It is gratifying to find that the ladies are largely availing themselves of the privilege of visiting and examining the franchise. In Toronto they form not an important factor to the cause of reform and in many cases are the bane of it. Dr. Dodds continues to exert their influence at the polls on behalf of all that is good, true and progressive. Mrs. Dr. Dodds, Mrs. Farnsworth, Mackenzie Waugh and Greenlee, were the first ladies to exercise the franchise and is Minden and Snowdon on Monday last. We have no doubt these ladies voted for the best man and consequently did not lose their votes.

Sudden Death.—Rachel Verbin, of Ontagenville, Ky., died the other day, and the attending physician says that there is no doubt but what she went to her grave the victim of tobacco poisoning. She had been a slave to the weed all her life, and even on her death-bed her last words were: "Oh, give me another pill at my old pipe." This should be a warning to tobacco consumers, and it is to be hoped that those who read of the sad fate of the above mentioned lady will profit by it. It might be said, before closing that she was 111 years of age when she departed this life.

Personal.—Mr. J. G. Dean, church of England missionary here, started on a trip to London, England, on Thursday last, going by way of New York. His many friends in this locality, wish him a pleasant and prosperous journey and a quick return. He expects to be able to settle his business in England and get back to his labors here for Sunday the 31th of February. This will only necessitate his absence for four more Sundays. Mr. Dean has been here a short time here, but during that period he has made many fast friends, and endeared himself to most of our settlers. His manifest devotion to duties, and dying among the diphtheria epidemic is fresh in the minds of everybody, and was worthy of all praise. His self imposed task of tending the sick, not only of the members of his own church, but other Christian denominations as well, showed that he was imbued with the true spirit of his Master in doing good to all men. His success in his ministerial duties has been very great as evinced by the large and increasing congregations attending his services, so that St. Paul's church is usually crowded at every service. The appreciation of his services has also been very apparent. The presentation of which his friends here subscribed to purchase him a horse to enable him the more fully to perform the duties of his mission, showed that he had struck a responsive chord in the hearts of his people that was alike creditable to both him and them. We trust he will return with renewed vigor to resume the good work he has commenced and that his success shall not only continue but increase in the future.

THINGS WE WOULD LIKE TO KNOW.

Where you are going next Christmas?

If "John" will go deer hunting again without a gun?

If the Minden township council will form a "clique" this year?

If the ratepayers in Lutterworth intend entering an action against the municipality and paying the costs themselves.

Why Mr. "C." waited until after all the good looking girls were left, before he would dance on Friday night?

Who the young man was that tried to pour himself off as a married man by dancing in the "old folks" duties at the party on Friday night?

FIRST DIVISION COURT.

The January sitting of the Division Court was held in the Court House, Minden, on Tuesday last and was presided over by His Honor Judge Dean. This was the first time His Honor had held a Court in the Provisional County of Haliburton and he took the opportunity of the occasion to give some good advice to the large number of persons in the Court Room about Fall Fairs, Agricultural Societies, small suits were sometimes brought into court unnecessarily, and he advised as much as possible to have their little matters settled outside the court. Still, he said, it was much better to have these differences disposed of in court than to resort to quarrelling or angry disputations over them. The Judges' remarks were very attentively and respectfully listened to and we hope they will all be acted upon. His judgements were clear and comprehensive and altho a judge can scarcely be satisfy a defeated litigant yet Judge Dean's decisions were convincing and forcible and commanded the respect of suitors.

There were but a few cases on the docket and some of them of a very trifling character.

Bonny v. Clarke was a claim for a five dollar bill lent by the plaintiff to defendant, against which a contra claim was set up. Several witnesses were called and the result was a verdict for 35 cents without costs for the plaintiff. Mr. Delamere for the plaintiff.

McNally v. Verbin.—This was the result of an neighbourly squabble about some pigs and potatoes and much eloquence was expanded by both the litigants. His Honor advised them to go into a quiet corner and take some of their neighbours with them and settle it and if they could not manage that the case would be called again and he would dispose of it.

Gainer v. Stata was a replevin case, the plaintiff having seized some chattels under execution against Abram Stata, which were claimed by his son John Stata. Ten witnesses were examined in the case, resulting in a verdict for the plaintiff as relating to a quantity of hay seized and in favour of the claimant as to a yoke of steers and two calves, the parties themselves afterwards coming to an amicable settlement of the whole matter in dispute. Mr. Delamere appeared in the case for the plaintiff.

McNally v. Verbin not having arrived at an amicable understanding about the potatoes and pigs and other matters, again appeared before His Honor, who must have been impressed with the vigor and volumes of true back country eloquence where occasion required such an effort. In this case there was $2.40 involved and the arguments were about at the same pace. Verdict for plaintiff.

MONMOUTH.

Correspondence of The Echo.

Election Notes.—Now I suppose, the municipal electors are all over, but time will not permit me to allow me to relate all I know concerning the election in Monmouth. One thing is worth noting that there were twelve votes polled over and above any previous election. There were also the largest number on the ballots, consequently there were more disappointed men. The following are the ones elected: Henry Cundall, Reeve; Edward Beckman, John Wade, Charles Roberts and Thomas Clark, Councillors. The election being over Henry Cundall kindly thanked the ratepayers for their liberal support and stated that he had received the largest vote that has ever been polled in Monmouth, and wound up by giving an invitation to his supporters to an oyster supper. Mr. Cundall received a postal card the day before from some unknown person, but supposed to be a joke for the date's come I who's fifth did his name from the card, and the word's rolling and spelling got over saw. No wonder that he was ashamed to sign his name to that and send them there on consumers cause to the asking. The following is a copy as it reads:

Jan. 5th, 1886.

Dear Sir.—Yest speeked well yesterday at the clock. Did you speak anyone yesterday, no. Have your orders is illegal dear dealr to take the next spell, you answer your sweetheart if you can do yes will do well it is illegal to speak any neglect." Now what would you think of a man who would write such a card as the above, would he be a suitable person for the council. What did he mean by "illegal oysters" he did not say the oyster supper was illegal. Now I know they are all right as daddy Shoman in Minden. for I have tried them and they were all right but there seems to be a couple of wags so called John Allen son in Haliburton and he would not hear anything that was illegal. Perhaps the party will write a letter and explain what he means for I do not think any person discover concerned him.

THE SCOTT MURDER.

The editor of the Bobcaygeon Mail, Rocester, who was one of Riel's prisoners, in 1870 copies the Rev. Dr. Young's graphic letter on the murder of Thos. Scott, and vouches for the correctness of its statements. He adds further:—We remember well when we were surrounded by Riel's treachery, and made prisoners, how all Riel addressed his rag tag and scrap to a comrade's request, and pointing at us, "Voos apel les chiens la; traiten les comme les autres." "You have dogs there; treat them like others." And right well he has rebelled himself carried out his behests. Twenty-six persons were thrown into a room 10 feet by 18, where we were forced to break sods of earth for our beds to prevent suffocation, and there we were for three months, without fire, and every other living indulgence or comfort, the wind blown in through the broken windows, fall upon certain occasions on each package as his filthy crowd of robbers saw fit to give us. After undergoing such treatment it would be supposed that we, at least, can feel a moment feel an atom of sympathy for the fate of Riel. The account of the last scene displayed on the gallows, the full relation of his last words the gasping admission of his being a man, that he will return with renewed vigor to resume the good work he has commenced and that his success shall not only continue but increase in the future.

CATARRH—A NEW TREATMENT.

Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved by modern medicine has been effected by Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. Out of 8,000 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety per cent. have been cured of their distressing malady. This is indeed the less startling when it is remembered that not five per cent. of patients pressed any faith whatever in the new ingredient, or even believed that it would cure incurable and other advertised cures never received a cure at all. Starting with the claim apparently self-evident by the intrinsic merits that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the blood. Dr. Sage's Remedy is so adapted that it overcomes—this accomplished, he claims the Catarrh is practically cured, and the statistics in proof of this statement, as we have stated by him for years ago are simply startling. No one else has ever attempted to cure Catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever proved so successful. The explanation of the remedy is simple, and the evidence is home, and the present success of the cure is the most forcible for a speedy and permanent cure, the austerity of cases being cured at one treatment. Pamphlets should be addressed with Messrs. R. DIXON & SON, 305 King street west, Toronto, Canada, and enclose stamp for their treatise on Catarrh.

Solicitors for Applicants.

An Anti-Alcoholic New Year's.

George Adolphus Grady,
Heavy swell and dandy,
Dressed up in full rig,
Took a drop of brandy
Just to give him spunk.

Rose him up while evening
In a virgin life new born;
New Year's morning calling.

He made his first salam
Under the Misses Bright's chandelier.
"A happy new year!"
"Refreshments?" Ah, delighted;
A slender bit of sponge cake,
Very small to make me,
Eating nothing else to-day,
Seeing breakfast comes so late, ah!"

Next on the Misses Taylor
Called George Adolphus, Esq'r.
"New year, really, Mr. Grady!"
Said Miss Jane Taylor, genially,
If I might make so free,
You look a little shaky,
Have you taken enough tea?"
He had 'not an his list.

"Dear George," cried Mrs. B.,
"Your looking quite as usual.
Do let me give you——"
"A little cup of coffee,
Now, don't let me be a bother."
Over all the girls in charge,
So spoonful he crushed up,
Fray take a plaster person."

"Ah, gracious, what's amiss?"
Cried Mrs. James Van Bilsen,
As George came red to him
Profuse Mrs. Bilsen,
"Raise high, eye bright—'tis clear
He needs nothing restored.
Here, swallow this, dear George, dear,
The treasure of valerian."

Hurt not the bells he rang,
And Mrs. Smith said quickly
His withers were unwrung.
Mrs. Smith knew quickly
"Soo, grin, some cognac
For Poor George, he looks as if
Or would you take quinine?"
George mutter'd, muttered, "Sure its"

Dear Grigg, new fairy Somers,
Made one attempt to fly away,
Then gave he need to bother
The girl's train was in the way.
But when the mother saw
Her silver in the sno-mouth
She said—her will was law—
"Bring that Somers, Female."

Enough! Adolphus Grigg
Made one bolt for the door,
Reached he by chance a thing
Into the sneezer "stuff"
"I'm perfumed, waiter, bring."
He seized it, and, to his
Mr. Hamilton is a sling.
And, dreamy! loving was quick.

The New Year.

I used to think the year was long;
I was a boy then, and knew
With spring all aglow;
Impatient for the time to come
When I should strike the whole world dumb
By one accomplishment.

I shook the blow—the world went on
Unmoved, and days have come and gone,
A little older grown, 'tis true,
And so, indeed, have friend, have foe,
And others I taught.

Some—forlorn—I could always hear
Their sobbing in the coming year,
Like bells that through the night-air chime,
How all mankind's, how our own time,
Now reeling, now in line.

Those boyish hopes and plans are mine;
The years came slowly, but went fast.
Each overthrew their number;
The bells ring out as cheerily
For others as they did for me.
But ah! for me no more.

But hark! I hear the glorious truth
That was but shadowed in my youth
Now pealing loud and clear
The truth that whispered, "Wait and see!"
Beyond time all that now I prize
Brings in this glad New Year.

Then good-bye, Old Year, if you must,
And with you all my sorrow.
With a great cry with a prayer,
Keep me from more and heavier grief,
And bring to peace and love and life
The world all your summer left.

Shoulder to Shoulder.

The awful story for poor Jack Lee,
He's the boy that lives with his wife you know,
And his wife's house is filled with ghosts
Because it has got a haunted room,
And what's more, it's quite enough
To talk of "accidents" and "fires"
And then of course that means her as has the room where it's all to happen,
Maybe I can say this better if I go home
In my mother's room I find them again.
And I've never since my father died stopped
With marbles and tops and many things more,
That I tell you, for he'd go with a tired head
It's jolly to meet it on equal terms.

Now poor Jack Son, where he visits me,
I take him to mother's room, you see,
Because it's the nicest room in the house,
When a fellow's spirits are getting low,
And mother, she's always about there,
And there's always a smile near Jack to greet,
And somehow that helps a fellow to give
More brightly in mother's room, I think;
Those arm-chairs also; and you'll never find
A glum
Or any old shadow in mother's room.

—Extract from "Young People.

At the Sunrise of Wednesday.

My soul, watching and musing, saw this sight:
Five mighty angels, swift and full of power,
Must each glory bright,
Clearing them wealth of the midnight heap—
Five angels of vengeance, swift and full of power,
Upreared and the other downward bent;
One with a sceptre surrounded with fire,
Other, magnetical, as on service sent.

Dark were and swift as body rapped sailing,
The angel of the East and the angel of the South;
He knew the constellations, and with eyes
And heart rightful, and with a voice of power;
And swift and bright as summers from the skies
Came

Cause the strong angel of the North's flow
And white he stood with calm and waterfall eyes
The last sharp smoke of midnight smote my Sight.

Sing Me a Song of the Olden Time.

Sing me a song of the olden time—
Of Mallory Knox and "Bonnie Dean;"
Sing to me now in the fading light,
For my heart and soul are full of night—
Sing me some dear old tune.

And I will dream as I hear your voice,
Sweet, and tender, and strong, and clear,
Like your mother's voice in the olden songs she sang
Long ago when we both were young—
You are so like her, dear.

Take down her harp and touch the strings;
You know the tune, and the words, I hear;
My heart has been full of harry and strife,
And the cold and worry of active life—
I long for the rest of song.

Sing "Ye Banks and Braes o' Bonnie Doon!"
Your mother sang that song to you
While you rocked her to sleep on your breast so many
Dear little daughter, do not weep—
Sing me the old songs, too.

Sing "League Weary" and "Land o' the Leal,"
"Auld Lang Syne" and "Bonnie Dundee;"
Your old songs that we never forget;
Sing me the old songs, the touching feel—
The song like a lull to me.

No needs ever so sweet can be
As the memory lays of the days of yore
Sung by some one we love and cherish
And now my child, in the inner life
I would hear those songs once more.

Sing me a song of the olden time—
Of Mallory Knox and "Bonnie Dean;"
Sing to me now in the fading light,
For my heart and my book to my youth to-night—
Sing me some dear old tune.

How a Suspicious Person.

A gentleman on Broadway accused Judkin of the theft of a watch. Judkin denied the charge coming, and said to the lady who came to the door:

"Madam, a man whose actions are very suspicious has just entered the yard by the alley gate. Wouldn't it be well for me to search the premises?"

"Oh, no, sir," she tersely replied. "That suspicious person is my husband. When he comes home sober, he enters at the front door. When he is tight he smashes in at the back gate. I've had enough never raise an alarm over him."—Detroit Free Press.

BLUE VEINS AND BLACK;

A Story of Blood and Iron.

The director stepped back and his officer shrugged his shoulders; they had well learned to know their young chief well enough to understand what this tone would admit of as consideration.

"I make Hartmann among the rank," said Arthur, turning to the chief engineer. "He is usually the leader in all uproar and mutiny; but to-day he means to have only found his men on to the attack and then to have left them alone. He is nowhere visible."

"And I, too, have missed him for a quarter of an hour," returned the engineer thoughtfully. "I hope he is not stirring up new mischief somewhere else. Yes certainly, the guards stationed at the mashine-house to be withdrawn. Direct Berbow!"

"Certainly. We want the two men at our disposal here at the house; and now since the mine has been forced to the surface, and all work at the machines, are quite secure. Nothing can be done without the engineering workmen below."

"With such a leader could this be considered?" asked the officer doubtfully.

Arthur's brow grew dark. "I might have thought of that! Hartmann is an uncontrolled, savage nature, and when enraged; he is not a villain and what you please. Pride high, eye bright—'tis clear He needs nothing restored. Here, swallow this, dear George, dear, The treasure of valerian."

"Dear Grigg, new fairy Somers,
Made one attempt to fly away,
Then gave he need to bother
The girl's train was in the way.
But when the mother saw
Her silver in the sno-mouth
She said—her will was law—
Bring that Somers, Female."

Enough! Adolphus Grigg
Made one bolt for the door,
Reached he by chance a thing
Into the sneezer "stuff"
"I'm perfumed, waiter, bring."
He seized it, and, to his
Mr. Hamilton is a sling.
And, dreamy! loving was quick.

The New Year.

I used to think the year was long;
I was a boy then, and knew
With spring all aglow;
Impatient for the time to come
When I should strike the whole world dumb
By one accomplishment.

I shook the blow—the world went on
Unmoved, and days have come and gone,
A little older grown, 'tis true,
And so, indeed, have friend, have foe,
And others I taught.

Some—forlorn—I could always hear
Their sobbing in the coming year,
Like bells that through the night-air chime,
How all mankind's, how our own time,
Now reeling, now in line.

Those boyish hopes and plans are mine;
The years came slowly, but went fast.
Each overthrew their number;
The bells ring out as cheerily
For others as they did for me.
But ah! for me no more.

But hark! I hear the glorious truth
That was but shadowed in my youth
Now pealing loud and clear
The truth that whispered, "Wait and see!"
Beyond time all that now I prize
Brings in this glad New Year.

Then good-bye, Old Year, if you must,
And with you all my sorrow.
With a great cry with a prayer,
Keep me from more and heavier grief,
And bring to peace and love and life
The world all your summer left.

Shoulder to Shoulder.

The awful story for poor Jack Lee,
He's the boy that lives with his wife you know,
And his wife's house is filled with ghosts
Because it has got a haunted room,
And what's more, it's quite enough
To talk of "accidents" and "fires"
And then of course that means her as has the room where it's all to happen,
Maybe I can say this better if I go home
In my mother's room I find them again.
And I've never since my father died stopped
With marbles and tops and many things more,
That I tell you, for he'd go with a tired head
It's jolly to meet it on equal terms.

Now poor Jack Son, where he visits me,

aguish Eugenie was repeating this prayer in her soul. He had been continually saying that time, bended form amid the mob; and so long as it was moving he kept up his pace. "So long she believed Arthur safe. That new hope and security rose at an end.

It might be that the sudden cessation of the uproar he had intentionally aroused called Hartmann to his evening one, or that a suspicion of what had occurred to his brother at the decisive moment. As if he had fatal air. Hartmann tried it, but after a few steps retreated half-stifled and half-fainting out Lorenza and him, who followed him, but fell fallen at the very threshold. They only hope him in the upper shaft. On the emergency to mention; we must cancel there."

The cabine-master, in whom the last words were addressed, and who had stood pale-pated agitated, made no motion in obey.

"The cabine refuse to do their work," he said in tones of anguish. "They have for an hour. I should before have assembled to the officers, but my messenger could go no more by way to them through the mob, and I thought that in any event the miner would assend through the lower shaft. In fact, they have reached a long time upon the elevator, but in vain. The signal fail."

"Hasten and assist! Do they fail us now?" cried the chief engineer, rushing into the cabine-house.

"The is footway shaft?" said Arthur hastily, stepping to the director. "Can we not go down there?"

The director shook his head. "The footway shaft has become impassable since this morning. You know, Herr Berbow, that Hartmann had all the upper ladders destroyed and because he would, at any price, hinder the descent of the miners. He did not fully succeed; the workmen went down the main shaft and at present this is our only support for the miner."

Ulrich had appeared with Wilms and several of his usual companions. "Nothing is going to come down there," he said to his comrades, as he made his way through all. "We are searching life needlessly when we ought to be hastening it. Perhaps we can do so here. Why should we not set to work? We must go down to help."

As he spoke, instantly rushing forward he suddenly saw the young child, who gazed steadily at him.

"The elevator will not work," he said, hastily changing his counsel an hour ago, and ten minutes ago the accident happened. These two vents have no connection, but it was then we hear ago we arrested your three men! What they down, Hartmann?"

Ulrich regarded back as if he had received a blow. "I recalled my brother," said he, "the moment my father went down and the others followed. I went myself to bid her to attention to the mischief had already been done. I did not wish it. God knows I did not."

Arthur turned from him to the chief engineer, the had just come out of the machine-house. "Well, how is it?" he called quickly.

The officer shrugged his shoulders. "The machinery will not work," he said. "Still, we have not been able to find where the trouble lies! The injury is not done from the explosion; it is from a human hand. If we do but succeed in repairing it, all entrance into the mine is denied to us, and all below are lost without hope of rescue, the evening."

At these words Ulrich had raised his voice and fixed his eyes upon Ulrich, who, with a face white as that of a corpse, stood there dumb and motionless. But he saw no threatened and made a hasty movement to-ward, but was stopped into his way.

"Where would you go?" he said.

"I must help. Let me go, Herr Berbow. I must, I tell you!"

"You cannot help," interposed Arthur coldly. "We can do nothing with our arms unless Hartmann destroy and make the danger fanfold. The work of restoration must be left to the officers. They alone [illegible] to reason out [illegible] and to give an intimation to the engineer-in-chief."

Wilbry stepped and the director also made propositions to carry out the counsels of their chief. He met with no resistance. All near were ready to carry out any of the officers, and all obeyed willingly. They felt as nothing of the truth of those words first—and to death and danger, both against the obstinate demands of their leader. "Up all this, if the hated element in the mines or above, and the hated engineers, fuses or your machinery and leaders to your work!"

Here were hundreds of arms, hundreds of strong ones ready to help; and the whole power, the whole possibility of rescue, lay in the hands of a few who must look upon their work, or to be [illegible] where the multitude and their leader could do nothing. Only one hut rush blindly into certain death. These officers, so much hated and denied—upon them all glances now hung, all wherever one of them came in sight, all were turned upon him. They would now at any cost have protested them and their work, and they needed such protection.

Minute after minute passed in anxious, agonised suspense. Wilbry had long since returned with the necessary documents. They know what had happened. They ran in breathless haste, like all the others; like them, they had their silence and despairing. They were no longer masters for the reason of the stoppage of the machinery was already found. The injury had proved a light and immediately repairation was possible. The engineers, under the direction of their superior, did their work with speed and fear, who must look upon their plans [illegible] reason and constantly, but still in vain, ought to force entrance into the mines or above. All the [illegible] had, as at one stroke, firmly reunited, loosened her as if dimpline. All obeyed, and obeying with more quickly than even before the spoken word of the master.

But the chief himself accomplished more than all the rest. His eyes, his voice, were everywhere; he was the first to know how to work himself how to inspire the Arthur possessed little or nothing of the science and experience so needed here. The young chief was reared in the most fabled ignorance of that it most concerned him to know; but of faculty he possessed which almost to the verge of madness—a genius, the genius of command.

Here the change in the people's mood had been so sudden, so lightning-like in its effects, that it was like a miracle. The same mob which a few minutes before had raged around the house, menacing all its inmates with destruction, now, in the darkness, because their insane demands were not granted. Strife, hostility, hatred, forgotten for months long, all now united in one feeling of reverence. To this reason alike harried miners and officers, friend and foe; and the more violent of the former, the more quickly did they bow to the will of the chief, and they told enough. In less than ten minutes the whole space around the mines was filled with men and women. Those who came only with deadly hatred would have buried itself against the other, a moment before, now stood in possession. They know who had happened. They saw

A Negro Gallowgay Accused Alive at the Stake.

A New Orleans despatch says: On the morning of December 17th Miss Corrie Bjork, a pretty young lady of Grand Bayou, La., went down the river to take the boat for Mobile, to spend the holidays with her relatives. On arriving at the steamboat landing she discovered that she had forgotten something, and started to return home, which was about a mile distant. Upon reaching the house she was brutally assaulted by a powerful and repulsive-looking negro, who found himself thwarted in the bravery of the young lady, who stoutly resisted the attack. The scoundrel, unable to effect his purpose, pulled out his pistol and shot his victim through the head and then ran off. She lived only two hours after the shot. The intelligence of the outrage and murder spread rapidly. In a short time nearly all the men in Clarke county were out searching for the ruffian who had committed the dastardly deed. The excitement was intense, and from the threats of the persons in search it is certain that if the negro was caught he would be summarily and terribly dealt with. The young lady did not recognize her assailant and could give no particulars leading to his identification. This rendered his capture extremely difficult. One after one was followed, but each ended in failure. The search, however, was not relaxed, but proved unavailing for several days. On Sunday a negro named Dick Turner was arrested and accused by a white man and two negroes. At the time of his arrest, Reed, who was many miles away from the scene of the murder, was supposed to be in the house of Mrs. Turner's son-in-law, from which the last was missing. This led to his arrest, as near the dead body of Miss Bayer a pair both Reed and Turner. The negroes were then taken to Gainesboro, where the first named was tried by the court and found to be guilty of the crime. He was sentenced to be burned at the stake. The testimony against Reed was circumstantial, but was considered sufficient to warrant his conviction. A blazing fire was soon kindled around the trembling negro, whose cries were drowned by the yells of the crowd as the stern men surrounding him. After he had roasted a while the fire was scattered and he was allowed to feel the full agony of burning. Then a new fire was built, and this in turn, after burning some time, was taken away. This process was repeated three times. Reed made no outcry, but his contortions showed that he suffered terribly. His Reed's body was entirely consumed, nothing remaining but a few charred fragments, which will, it is hoped, serve as a terrible warning to others. This is the second case of the kind in the same place within the last ten years. The other victim was a negro preacher who murdered an old lady and a boy and then outraged a young girl. He was arrested in a similar manner by his congregation, and his congregation helped to roast him.

DISSECTING A CAPSIZED VESSEL.

Sailors Cutting the Captain's Ghost Rough Almost a Certain Success Unknown.

A Boston, Mass., despatch says: The three-masted schooner Willie P. Haynes lies at the Iron Works Docks, at Somerset, deserted by all except her entered crew. She is undergoing the process of dissection, and is almost unrecognizable as a vessel. She arrived here about a week ago with a cargo of coal. A week ago Saturday Capt. Thrasher was killed while overseeing the unloading of an engine from a train at the railroad dock.

That night the mate and cabin boy went to bed about 9 o'clock. The mate says he woke up with the captain's voice giving the order, "Take hold of that anchor." "At last," says the mate, "I dozed again, and was just about to turn over when I heard something going on up forward on deck. I thought it might be the cook rolling his pin, and not paying any attention to it until I heard a fearful thump on deck. Then I sprang up and rushed on deck and looked around. I could see him on the fore-head, and after waiting awhile I went below and laid awake until daylight. When I went on deck I found that the bower anchor had been dropped from the bow aft nearly to the waist, where the shore chain is. It takes a good many men to handle that chain. I left for parts unknown. Don't know."

Some day the mate and cabin boy may run across him. He left for parts unknown. The ghost story has been so widely circulated that the owners are unable to engage a new crew.

An Operatic Singer's Child Turned Her Triumphs — Her Quarrels with Her Lover and Publisher.

A Buda-Pesth suit is creating a good deal of interest in theatrical circles of this city. A few days ago Franzin Aranka Szekisi, a young and romantic girl, came to Buda-Pesth with a sister to attend the opera one night. She was gifted with a charming voice and a beautiful face, and soon obtained an engagement at the opera house and made a brilliant debut as the Rienzen-Lucy Theatre in "Lelio Rooth." During the evening she was overwhelmed with applause and bouquets. Her triumph seems to have turned her head, for, after the performance, she caused a quarrel upon a well-known singer to whom she had been engaged, because he had declared himself unable to neglect his business to accompany her on a visit to his sister. The quarrel ended in nothing, however, was smoothed over and the betrothed couple had kissed and made friends, when the latter left the house on the way to the station with a friend, Franzin Aranka rushed after him crying, "Come back! Come back! I am ruined if you leave me! I'll kill myself!" And then she ran back to the house. Knowing she had three times already attempted suicide, her lover paid no attention after her. He burst open the door of her bedroom and found Franzin Aranka already stretched on the floor, a corpse. Running a strong smell of cyanic acid he dispatched his friend to the doctor's and administered antidotes. But the poison was the quickest and fatal enough to end the unhappy girl's life. Her lover's friend had come too late, and after several hours of dreadful agony she died in her lover's arms. The whole city is mourning the loss of this promising queen of opera.

Since the Blood-Auctioning business it has been a common practice for girls and women in England to assume fictitious attending signs of impropriety. In most instances the jury have promptly convicted, but a Dr. Brady was sent to prison. On Dec. 11th this gentleman was arraigned at Exeter and presented with a purse and 500 guineas by the members of the profession, as a mark of their esteem and belief in his innocence. Sir William Jenner, physician to the Queen, was one of the first promoters of the fund, and the address was signed by him and the leading medical men throughout the country.

FROM THE FRIGID ZONE.

Interesting Arctic Relics Brought Home by the Captain of a Dutch Whaler.

A London cable says: A series of Arctic relics of strange interest has been brought home by Captain Fairweather, of the whaler Diana, of Dundee, and transmitted to the Admiralty through Mr. Leigh Smith. These relics consist of various documents in a cylindrical tin case which had been deposited by several of the Franklin search expeditions thirty years ago. The vessel was frozen in the ice-pack and abandoned by Mr. Adam Young when at Beechey Island in 1876. Captain Fairweather says that he picked up the tin case on Point Pullen, Beechey Islet, under the following circumstances: While lying at the floe edge in the usual place, about the end of June last, he was surprised to see several sledges, with native coming off in the ship. He had never seen natives in that quarter before, and therefore thought that they had come from Admiralty Inlet for the express purpose of robbing the depots left by former Arctic expeditions in Beechey Island and Point Pullen. The captain was alone with good reason, surprised at the manner in which the natives conducted themselves. Their treasure were cut from "Dread-nought" cloth, cargo and woollen shirts being piled overboard supplied the place of the usual Esquimaux furs. The natives were all of the Arctic type, and their dress was completed with English caps of various descriptions. It did not require much imagination on the part of the captain to surmise where the stores were located from which the lucky natives had been so liberally supplying themselves. Their sledges, also built on the Arctic model, were loaded with tobacco and various other little luxuries, down even to onion powder, the pungent smell of which, however, pleased them. On ascertaining the cheapness, the captain was fortunate enough to find the real Head 'next to Gainestown, where the loot was found to the gun and was found to contain a perfect arsenal of weapons, the evidence of his guilt, and charged with the crime, the scoundrel admitted that he had attempted to outrage Miss Bayer, but denied that he murdered her. The news of his capture had spread, and at this time over 300 men had assembled in the hamlet. Threats were freely made at his fate. It was decided that he should die at once. The majority insisted that he should be burnt at the stake. The decision was carried into effect without delay. The victim was firmly bound to a post by ropes, and then the fagots, straw and shavings were collected with kerosene. A blazing fire was soon kindled around the trembling negro, whose cries were drowned by the yells of the stern men surrounding him. After he had roasted a while the fire was scattered and he was allowed to feel the full agony of burning. Then a new fire was built, and this in turn, after burning some time, was taken away. WHOLESALE MURDER.

How a Smuggler in Mosul-De Finds Out Bad of His Cargo.

A Seattle, W. T., despatch says: The details of a horrible story which passed through this city on the 10th are as follows: About one day last summer an Italian boatman, accompanied by seven Chinamen, left Victoria in the former's boat for the straits of Fuca. When almost across the straits the Italian observed the United States revenue cutter Oliver Wolcott coming towards him, the evident intention of the officers of the vessel being to examine the contents of this craft. The Italian, knowing that a severe penalties attending to the offense of smuggling Chinese into the United States, resolved to make away with the evidence of his guilt. He killed the Chinamen out of the cabin one by one, and as each man came out the Italian struck him on the head with a club, and pushed the body overboard. In this way he got rid of the whole number, and when the officers from the cutter boarded his boat and purchased a two-cance bottle, swallowing two-thirds of it.

The Calendar Cross.

This is the season for hydrophobia, smallpox and calendars. All of these afflictions make their appearances together, and the people will have to grin and bear the calendars. One large firm announces ninety different varieties of English, French and American calendars. All of these are pretty and useful.

Several medical writers have lately called attention to the fact that although there is a marked diminution of drunkenness in England, the use of powerful narcotics and stimulating drugs has largely increased. Even nitro-glycerine—a comparatively new medicine—has found its devotees. The Lancet says: "Since the introduction of nitro-glycerine tablets into the British pharmacopœia the use of this drug has increased to an enormous extent, and it is to be feared that its manufacture is carried on unscrupulously."

THE ADDIE DAVIS TRAGEDY.

Sad Story of a Girl's Downfall and Death.

TROUBLES THAT LED TO SUICIDE.

A Sheet-Iron Stove Pipe Worse Than the Reproaches of Her Dead Daughter.

The inquest into the cause of the death of the young woman, Adelaide Davis, who committed suicide on Thursday in Toronto by taking poison, which has held previously, was resumed this morning at the Morgue before Coroner Duncan.

John Davis, the father of the deceased, was the first witness called. He is a gray-headed old man, and felt so deeply the disgrace his daughter had brought upon him that his evidence was given at times prevented him from continuing his evidence. He said he had lived in Scarin. He had seven children living and buried one in the yard of his daughter Adelaide. A number of letters which were found in the room where the girl committed suicide were identified by him as being in her handwriting.

John Sutherland, commercial traveller, was next called. After being warned that his evidence might be used against him, he testified that last Monday morning about 10:30 he was coming out of his rooms when he met Mrs. Davis and another girl. They looked very hard at him, and he looked at them. They both walked along towards the Albion House. He hastened to the stable and asked them where they were going. The deceased said she was trying to find a boarding house. He said, "Why not stay with me?" They did not say much one way or the other. He said he would be pleased to have them stay overnight. They went on a little way, and then turned back. He asked them to call in and see him. They said they would. They went on a little way, and then turned back again, and told him she would meet him at half-past 8. He met her on King street at that time, and they went up together to his rooms. She said she had some trouble with friends, and was ashamed to go home. She wanted to stay all night. He told her she might return to her friends. She stayed there three days—until noon Thursday, when she left, saying she was going to see her brother's house. She asked for the key of the room so that she could get in when she came back. He told her he might not be in to get in himself, and he finally agreed to leave the key outside under his trunk. He left a few minutes after and returned between 4 and 5. When he went into the room she screamed out, throwing her arms in the air and saying that she had poisoned herself. He took her downstairs and Dr. Reeves' office and asked him if he had a stomach pump. He said he had not, and told him to run and get one at once. She then said, "You cannot save the woman die." Dr. Reeves said, "Take her out of here." He took her to a hack and drove her to the station. At that time she could speak. She had no hat or cloak on, and said that she had taken the poison in the room. Witness went to get another dector, leaving the girl sitting upon the steps, just outside Dr. Reeves' office. It was about 5 o'clock. Dr. Oldright, but he was not Dr. James Rose, on Sherbourne street, was found to be engaged. He went in Dr. Reeves' office, where he was supposed to be out. Dr. Oldright, on being informed of the circumstances, came immediately. Dr. Sheffer did not live far from the apartment, and witness told him that Dr. Reeves was gone, as he was in the room at the time. Dr. Sheffer said something about tippling and brandy, and when he returned there seemed to be no one attending to her. Witness and Dr. Sheffer then took her to the assistance of Dr. Reeves and Mr. Swinburne he carried her upstairs to his room. She never spoke after being in the room. She was put in a position by a juryman, witness stated that Dr. Reeves refused to do anything. He never saw the deceased before Monday last.

AUTOPSY HELD.

The coroner then read the following letters and post-card, which were found in the room with the deceased:

THURSDAY.

DEAR FATHER,—I have just heard that you are looking for me, and I am sorry to have caused so much trouble. I was guilty, but not as guilty as you think. I am not the man who does anything. His house is an University and he is a gentleman. He has proved his innocence, and that will my friends think when this is brought to light. I cannot live, as my name will not be held to be said. I am enclosing a postcard to Mr. Rose, and you can send it to him. I have been a source of trouble to you, and now it is all at an end. You must excuse this letter, as I am in a hurry. Good-bye, dear father. I am glad that I am the one who has caused you the trouble, and not Mary, for she will see by my ways that sin has ruined me, and she will be careful. Now, dear father, I am in search of me, and I don't want to see my name. Good-bye, dear father.

P.S.—I did not yield to Dr. E. Hawley's wishes, but he took advantage of me when I was not myself. He is a villain. My trunk and clothes are at 97 Carlton street, and I am here breaking my heart. Good-bye, dear father. I cannot live. Kiss me home a friend.—Good-bye, papa.

DEAR FATHER,—I [illegible] I left you this morning I went to my brother's—as I told you I did—but I was not welcome, and on a question of cash. He then took away my cheque from me and had me arrested, but I will be released. I will not come away in my home need. I found that my father is here looking for me. I would say that my life will be ended in your room. I can not help it. I am in such a state of mind that I want to the door to unlock it, but I could not do it. I am sorry I am not dead. I will not do it. I am sorry I am not dead. I will not do it. I am sorry I am not dead. I will

KINMOUNT KERNELS.

Correspondence of THE ECHO.

School Teacher.—Chas. Cashin, jr., has been elected to fill the position of the retiring trustee, Mr. H. Graham.

Municipal.—Although the rain fell all day, and the roads anything but first class, a good vote was polled in this subdivision. The total number of votes cast being 80. This year opens a new era in municipal voters and one lady, Mrs. Davis, accepted the privilege conferred upon her, and came forward and cast her vote for the weal or woe of our township. We hope that many ladies of our land have to-day exercised that right and that our representatives may not long restrict their voting power to mark narrow limits, but say boldly and manfully at the table marked "Yes," when civil, municipal influences will be for good.

Fast Work.—Two of our blacksmiths, one day last week, shod a team "all around" in twenty minutes, putting them in proper shape for our present icy roads. Who can beat that?

Orange Lodge.—At the annual meeting of the Victoria L. O. L. No. 1,100, held in the lodge room, Kinmount, on Monday, 21st December, the following officers were elected:—F. Irvin, W. Master; W. Morgan, D. M.; R. Scully, Chaplain; G. Swinson, Treasurer; W. J. Craig, Sec. P. Gregg, D. of C.; Committee—J. T. Gilmore, Robt. Cottingham, J. Lisle, R. Henderson and J. Molyneaux.

A WOMAN KILLS A PANTHER.

Mr. George Greenleaf unexpected by his wife, was returning from a free-Clayton in the mountains of Georgia, on Wednesday night. It was about nine o'clock and, as is the custom of the country, they both walked up one of the hills while the mules and wagon ascended, the little boy being the driver. Suddenly a panther was heard in the adjoining canebrake. [illegible] It looked like two balls of fire. It proved to be a large panther, or, as it is by the finest Greenleaf opened his knife, and as the beast sprang at him he made a lunge, only to drive the knife into his wife's arm, she having thrown herself upon him at the sight of danger. He dropped the knife and fell under the second spring of the panther. The beast, evidently maddened by the scent of blood, was about to insert its teeth into Mr. Greenleaf when his wife, who had picked up the knife, acting under the inspiration of desperation, made a lunge out at the beast's throat. The panther gave a pitiful cry, rolled over and died. The cry reached the ears of some hunters near by, and soon a number of them were on the spot, to find that a woman had accomplished what they had been vigorously trying to do.

THIS AND THAT.

The following testimonial was given to a servant girl:—"This is to certify that the bearer has been in my service one year, less eleven months. During this time I found her to be diligent at the front door, temperate at her work, attentive to herself, prompt at strange, amiable towards young gentlemen, faithful to her sweethearts, and honest when everything is safe under lock and key."

"Is the lady of the house in?" he asked, as he stood on the steps of a residence in Cass avenue the other morning. "Which lady of the house?" asked the girl who answered the ring. "Why, are there two?" "Sartin sub. If you want the white lady she am out. If you has business wid de wuff lady yarnest to develop."

"Your son has been knocked off the railroad and killed," exclaimed a man approaching an Arkansas Colonel. Who knocked him off?" excitedly demanded the Colonel. "A railroad engine." "Well, that begins to explain matters, for I have devilish well he wasn't knocked off by any ordinary mule. He was one of the boys, he was, and tell you."

Even in the making of a will, little peculiarities will occasionally present themselves. Here is an Irish specimen: "I hereby give and bequeath to my beloved wife Reid [illegible] and to my beloved son Patrick, one-half of the remainder; and to Thomas, my youngest son, the rest. If anything should happen to any, together with the old sett without wheels, to my sincere and affectionate friend, Thomas McCarthy, in sweet Ireland."

A POWERFUL LECTURE ON TEMPERANCE.

Two colored brothers, one an old man and the other a young one. The young one took off his apron and started out of the door.

"Yo's gwan to get a drink, Jim?" asked the elder.

"Dat's what I's gwan to do."

"Go and git yo' drink. I 'spect ter dedo same thing when I was young. When I was first married dah was a gin mill next to the shop to me. I wouldn't call it a gin mill, and ebberty cents a day outen de dollah's half I 'sebbed. Well, one mawnin' I went into de brickish shop, and I 'spose it was 'cause it hut de same wat keep de likker shop."

"Give me ten or twelve pounds pot'er fo'er clock," he said.

"He got it and went out. I 'sarked up to de butcher and looked to see what money I had let."

"What do you wan'?" said the butcher.

"Give me ten cents' worf ob Mister," was my remark.

"I was all I could pay for. Now yo' go and yet yo' drink. You'll on libber, but de man wat sells yo' de stuff will lush his pot'er into stock. De man lushin' de ten cents yo let him—de man in front de libber. I ain't touched the stuff in thirty years, an' I am outin pot'erhouse myself."

HE DON'T THERE NOW.

One of those friendly, good-natured fellows whom you don't wish to offend, and yet whom you detest because they bore you, attached himself to a Detroit insurance agent most unwillingly, and for a week kept asking for a loan every few days, with no idea of ever paying it back, but he spent several hundred dollars at the office and became in time so much at home that he used [illegible] and even tendered [illegible] advice on all [illegible] matters. The other day he dropped in and found the office within the agent would out, and he had just opened a new box of cigars to have a smoke when a strong, energetic man entered.

"See here, Stubb, I want that money."

"You'll have to call again," replied the man as he looked up from his newspaper.

"I'll be blanked if I do! That money was due a month ago and I won't be put off any longer."

"Come or get ill-natured?"

"I won't do it."

"Do I, well, Stubb, look me in the eye and tell me that you can pay that bill!"

"I've been to Detroit every day for the future until you pay that bill!"

The boys doesn't hang out in that office any more. What the agent returned and found him lying half dead on a box of gin. Matters and he is anxious to see his debtor's face to extend the sympathy demanded by the occasion. Indeed, his cold and unfeeling conduct rather led the boys to suspect that a cold-blooded plot had been laid to do Stubb him of his valuable life.
